

Privacy Settings

We use cookies to optimize our website and our service.

- ☒ Functional
- ☒ Statistics
- ☒ Marketing

Save

Functional only

Accept all

COUNTRIES
AUSTRALIA ITALY MYANMAR

THEMES
CULTURAL POLICY HERITAGE

DISCIPLINE
PHOTOGRAPHY

document architectural heritage

Two photographers have embarked on a Burmese book project documenting the crumbling British colonial-era architecture for which the capital Yangon is renowned. It raises questions about the conservation of architectural heritage in Myanmar.

“There’s no trace of Hong Kong’s colonial past left in the city’s architecture – it’s all been torn down.” “The city has lost its historical architectural identity. Don’t let that happen to Yangon!” It’s stern warnings like these that came from a range of experts who attended the recent Yangon Heritage Trust’s International Conference.

The YHT put out a call out for help to save Yangon’s colonial buildings, and documentary photographers Jacques Maudy and Jimi Casaccia felt compelled to answer. The result is a stunning body of images of these buildings, soon to be published in a glossy high-quality publication titled Yangon, a City to Rescue.

Yangon is an Asian city on the cusp of rapid growth and change. Fast-built sharp, modern buildings might be sprouting-up quickly, but there’s no crowding-out of the stunning and intact architectural jewels that help tell the story of Burma’s colonial past. Wander down just about any street in the city of six million people and you’ll see them – from apartment buildings, to dramatic public structures.

The photographers, Australian Jacques Maudy and Italian Jimi Cassaccia, manage to depict a time-warped metropolis through their striking pictures while also sending a serious historical preservation message message

The body of work, taken on behalf of the Yangon Heritage Trust, founded by prominent Burmese historian Thant Myint U, offers quality imagery and fine detail in saturated color with a special feel for the monsoonal mood of the former capital.

The trust received a significant boost when Australian Foreign Minister Bob Carr visited the city, formerly known as Rangoon, in June and pledged his government's support and expertise to help protect the nation's rich architectural heritage.

There is deep concern that with the recent easing of economic sanctions, a drive for development may pose a serious threat to the significant yet fast-decaying examples of 18th century design. Many buildings are in need of serious restoration after years of idle neglect.

Already, as a direct result of the trust's work, the government has reportedly suspended 20 building permits until the subject of conservation can be clarified.

Read article in Eurasia Review

Read review in The Irawaddy

Read article in Time World Magazine

Read more about the publication Yangon: a city to rescue and view more images on the photographers' website

Top image: General Hospital

Photo Copyright Jacques Maudy + Jimi Cassaccia & JJMCPhoto.com

Similar content

POSTED ON
15 JUN 2013

Yangon a City to Rescue | new publication

POSTED ON
12 AUG 2013

Brisbane | Yangon a City to Rescue | exhibition

POSTED ON
12 JUN 2013

Investing in Heritage Cities: Stimulus for Sustainable Tourism and Livelihoods | Myanmar

POSTED ON
03 JUN 2013

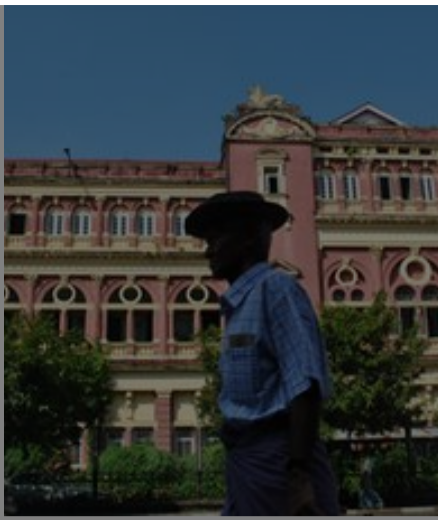

Yangon Heritage Trust | Myanmar

POSTED ON
30 AUG 2013

Yangon architects and urban planners welcomed in Australia to study heritage conservation

POSTED ON
06 OCT 2015

Yangon | Southeast Asia's architectural treasure

ABOUT ASEF CULTURE360

culture360.asef.org brings Asia and Europe closer by providing information, facilitating dialogue and stimulating reflection on the arts and culture of the two regions.

MORE ABOUT ASEF CULTURE360 | FAQ

